RENTAL MARKET ANALYSIS AND POLICY DEVELOPMENT FRAMEWORK (ITEM NO. 6, AGENDA OF MAY 16, 2017)

On May 16, 2017, the Board of Supervisors (Board), adopted a Motion (Motion) by Supervisors Solis and Kuehl directing the Chief Executive Officer (CEO), in coordination with the Directors of the Departments of Regional Planning, Consumer and Business Affairs, Public Health, Public Works, Beaches and Harbors, the Executive Director of the Community Development Commission, the Assessor, and County Counsel to produce and report to the Board within 90 days with a Los Angeles County Tenant Protections Policy Development Framework (Framework). On August 21, 2017, the CEO requested an additional 30 days to respond to the Motion.

The Motion requested that this Framework include: 1) a review of existing sources of information and an analysis of private rental housing stock and commercial properties for lease; 2) an inventory of stakeholders with involvement in the rental property market; 3) State and federal laws and regulations that pertain to the County's ability to regulate the private rental market; and 4) a review of best practices implemented by other jurisdictions designed to protect tenants. The CEO, in consultation with the above referenced departments, submits the attached Framework for your consideration.

DEVELOPMENT OF FRAMEWORK

Los Angeles County is confronting a housing affordability crisis and the Board has elected to consider a range of tools to address these circumstances. On October 27, 2015, the Board adopted a motion to establish an Affordable Housing Budget Unit and develop a first-of-its-kind Affordable Housing Outcomes Report (Outcomes Report). The first annual Outcomes Report was submitted to the Board on May 5, 2017. It revealed a shortage of over 550,000 rental homes that are considered affordable to renter households at or below 50 percent of the Area Median Income (AMI). This Framework explores what, if anything, might be done to protect renters in the unincorporated areas of Los Angeles County. As discussed in the Framework, the County government is the first line of government for the unincorporated areas, and has greater flexibility regarding the use of tenant protections in these jurisdictions.

In developing the Framework, the CEO worked with County Counsel to provide a legal analysis of State and federal laws and regulations that would authorize or constrain the County's ability to regulate the private rental market. In addition, the CEO convened a working group of affected departments to review current practices from other jurisdictions, analyze existing sources of information on the private rental housing market, and compile a list of potential stakeholders.

Further, while several studies have reviewed displacement trends in Southern California, there has not been a comprehensive study of these trends in the unincorporated areas of the County. To further evaluate the applicability of tenant protections for the private rental and commercial housing stock in Los Angeles County, the CEO identified and gathered statistical information from a variety of publicly available sources. The CEO also worked with a consultant to gain a preliminary understanding of those neighborhoods in unincorporated Los Angeles County that are facing the highest risk of displacement. Indicators such as changes in rent and housing prices, changes in household incomes, and changes in housing tenure were analyzed by unincorporated community.

CONCLUSION

As Los Angeles County residents continue to experience an elevated cost of housing, tenants are faced with rising rents in homes that are currently affordable to them. This Framework provides information to inform decisions as to what tenant protections could be put in place to provide at-risk tenants with greater stability in their homes.

The CEO will convene stakeholders to review the proposed Framework, and assemble the Tenant Protections Working Group (Working Group) to solicit further community input. As provided for in the Motion, the Working Group is to consist of two members appointed by each Supervisor. It is this Working Group that will provide recommendations to the Board regarding tenant protections that might be enacted for unincorporated areas, as well as any actions that could be applied Countywide. Additionally, as requested by Supervisor Barger in an amendment to the Motion, the CEO will consult with the Los Angeles Economic Development Corporation (LAEDC) to seek their input on the progress and recommendations of the Working Group. The CEO will work with the Executive Office of the Board to convene and manage meetings of the Working Group.

Tenant Protections Policy Development Framework

COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES

Chief Executive Office | September 2017

INTRODUCTION

On May 16, 2017, the Board of Supervisors (Board), adopted a Motion (Motion) by Supervisors Solis and Kuehl directing the Chief Executive Officer (CEO), in coordination with the Directors of the Departments of Regional Planning, Consumer and Business Affairs, Public Health, Public Works, Beaches and Harbors, the Executive Director of the Community Development Commission, the Assessor, and County Counsel to produce and report to the Board within 90 days with a Los Angeles County Tenant Protections Policy Development Framework (Framework).

BACKGROUND FOR DEVELOPMENT OF FRAMEWORK

Los Angeles County is confronting a housing affordability crisis and the Board has elected to consider a range of tools to address these circumstances. On October 27, 2015, the Board adopted a motion to establish an Affordable Housing Budget Unit and develop a first-of-its-kind Affordable Housing Outcomes Report (Outcomes Report), revealing a shortage of over 550,000 rental homes that are considered affordable to renter households at, or below 50 percent of the Area Median Income (AMI).

One element of a comprehensive affordable housing production and preservation program is the protection of existing renters from displacement from homes that are affordable to them. Statewide, as housing prices continue to increase, local jurisdictions have taken steps to address the issue of displacement and tenant stability; and renter protection initiatives were placed on the ballot for six cities, and successfully passed in two, in the November 2016 election. This Framework explores what, if anything, can be done to protect renters in the unincorporated areas of Los Angeles County.

In developing the Framework, the CEO worked with County Counsel to provide a legal analysis of State and federal laws and regulations that would authorize or constrain the County's ability to regulate the private rental market. In addition, the CEO convened a working group of affected departments to review current practices from other jurisdictions, analyze existing sources of information on the private rental housing market, and compile a list of potential stakeholders.

STATE AND FEDERAL LAWS AND REGULATIONS

State and federal laws affect tenants and property owners, and dictate a local jurisdiction's ability to constrain the private rental market, thereby impacting the range of available options for tenant protection. Local ordinances to address rapidly escalating rents and tenant displacement have existed in California since the late 1970s. The Cities of Santa Monica and Berkeley were among the first cities with ordinances to protect tenants by imposing regulations on residential rent increases. The County previously had a rent regulation ordinance between 1983 and 1985. The County's rent regulation ordinance limited rent increases to 9 percent annually, allowed for certain automatic rent increase adjustments, established permissible causes for evictions, and required relocation assistance for displaced tenants. The County ultimately phased out the rent regulation ordinance by December 31, 1985, "to create opportunities for new construction in the County."¹

County's Jurisdiction

The jurisdiction of the County is derived from the California Constitution, State statutes, and the County Charter. Generally, the County's authority to make and enforce laws is limited to the unincorporated areas of the County, unless specific State statutes allow the County to act countywide. Article XI, section 7 of the California Constitution states that "a county or city may make and enforce within its limits all local, police, sanitary, and other ordinances and regulations not in conflict with general laws" of the State. This constitutional grant of police power is the source of both counties' and cities' authority to independently govern, and it is subject only to the limitation that they exercise this authority within their territorial limits and subordinate to State and federal law.² Within the unincorporated areas, the County's police power is as broad as the Legislature's, as long as there are no conflicting State or federal laws.³ If otherwise valid local legislation conflicts with State or federal law, the local law is void under the doctrine of preemption.⁴ Land use regulation in California historically has been a function of local government under the grant of police power, and it has been recognized that a city's or county's power to control its own land use decisions derives from this inherent police power, not from the delegation of authority by the State.⁵

Federal Laws

Rent stabilization ordinances have been held to be within a state's constitutional exercise of police power. In limited circumstances, public need justifies the restriction of property rights without compensation. Protection of tenants is a legitimate state interest, and therefore any legislation rationally related to ensuring such protection is constitutional. As long as a rent stabilization measure is calculated to eliminate excessive rents, and provide a mechanism for ensuring landlords receive a “just and reasonable” return on their property, such a measure does not violate the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments of the U.S. Constitution, which prohibit the taking of private property for public use without “just compensation.” Further, courts have held that rent stabilization ordinances do not deter federal fair competition laws when such ordinances are unilaterally imposed upon all rental property owners.⁶

The Code of Federal Regulations expressly preempts the entire field of rent regulation by local rent control boards regarding any federal housing projects, known as federally subsidized housing assistance for low-income households. Projects funded by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, such as Section 8, also known as tenant-based rental assistance, are fully governed by federal law. No local jurisdiction may enact ordinances that seek to regulate federal housing rental rates.

State Laws

The California Civil Code governs rent increases throughout the state. Without additional local regulation, the California Civil Code is the full extent of tenant protection available. In non-rent regulated jurisdictions, such as the unincorporated area of the County, when increasing the rent, a landlord must give a tenant a 30-day notice if a rent increase is less than 10 percent of the lowest amount of rent charged during the preceding 12 months. A landlord must give a 60-day notice if the rent increase is more than 10 percent of the lowest amount of rent charged during the last 12 months.⁷ Further, to terminate a periodic lease of a year or more, the landlord is required to give a 60-day notice, and for a month-to-month lease, a landlord is required to give a 30-day notice.⁸ There is no State law which requires a landlord to provide a reason for terminating a lease.

Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act.

The Costa-Hawkins Rental Housing Act (Costa-Hawkins) allows a landlord to establish the initial rent for a new tenant, a policy known as “vacancy decontrol.”⁹ The law removes local controls on the rent level that may be charged at a tenancy’s start, although in units subject to rent stabilization, future rent increases do remain limited to the amount authorized by a local jurisdiction for the duration of the tenancy. Further, Costa-Hawkins establishes that certain units must be exempt from local rent control laws, including units with certificates of occupancy issued after February 1, 1995. Single family homes and other single family dwelling units, like condominiums, that are separate from the title to any other dwelling unit, are additionally exempt from local rent control and stabilization laws. Multi-family units built prior to 1995 can still be subject to local rental rate regulation, however, Costa-Hawkins allows landlords in those rent-controlled communities to establish initial rental rates when there is a change in occupancy, pursuant to vacancy decontrol. The effect of this provision permits landlords to impose whatever rent they choose at the commencement of a tenancy.¹⁰

Costa-Hawkins has had significant impacts on rental housing throughout California. Practically speaking, it may cause new tenants to start their tenancies in rent-stabilized jurisdictions at significantly higher rent levels than their neighbors who are longer-term tenants.

Ellis Act

The Ellis Act is a California State law passed in 1985 that allows landlords to evict residential tenants in order to "go out of the rental business" without cause.¹¹ It prevents local governments from compelling a property owner to offer, or to continue to offer, accommodations in the property for rent or lease. Landlords in jurisdictions with rent stabilization must comply with both the Ellis Act and local requirements before being permitted to remove a controlled rental unit from the rental housing market. Those jurisdictions can require that landlords file a "notice of intent to withdraw," pay relocation assistance, extend the termination date of tenancies for disabled or elderly tenants, and can set limits on initial rents when those properties re-enter the rental market within a certain time period. In jurisdictions without eviction protections, a landlord can terminate a tenancy without cause with an appropriate 30-day or 60-day notice. Practically speaking, the Ellis Act only impacts jurisdictions with eviction protections.

A locality placing reasonable requirements on the future rental use of the property is legal if those requirements do not have the effect of penalizing property owners for exercising their rights under the Ellis Act. An example of a permissible ordinance would be a locality requiring a property owner seeking to re-enter the rental market to first offer the unit to previously displaced tenants.¹² In the City of West Hollywood, if the landlord puts the current rental structure back on the market within 10 years after taking it off, they must contact the previously "Ellis'd" tenant(s) who asked for right of first refusal to move back into the unit. Within the first five years, they must re-rent to the tenant at the rent the tenant was paying at move-out, plus any intervening general adjustments. After five years, they may re-rent to the tenant at the current market rate.

California Civil Code, Commercial Rent Control

In 1987, the California legislature enacted Chapter 2.6 of the California Civil Code which governs and prohibits rent control in the commercial lease market. "No public entity shall enact any measure constituting commercial rental control, nor shall any public entity enforce any commercial rental control."¹³ The chapter's stated intent is "to prevent the imposition of artificial barriers on commercial rents" and shall be applied "to every local jurisdiction in the state."¹⁴ In the late 1970s and early 1980s, the City of Berkeley attempted commercial rent control ordinances with either temporary or very limited geographic application. The ordinances were successfully challenged and ultimately phased out.¹⁵

Finally, the language of the lease governs in the majority of commercial lessor-lessee relationships. Courts will generally uphold the written terms of a lease, even when deemed unfair and/or unreasonable. The general "automatic" or "implied" protections, such as the warranty of habitability found in residential tenancies, do not exist in commercial situations.

MEANINGFUL PRACTICES FROM OTHER JURISDICTIONS - RESIDENTIAL

Background

Fifteen California cities have adopted rent stabilization ordinances, most recently, the Cities of Mountain View and Richmond, with San Jose, Oakland, and Beverly Hills adopting recent, more protective, revisions to their more longstanding ordinances.¹⁶ San Francisco, the only county with rent stabilization, has had their ordinance in effect since 1979. However, San Francisco is distinct from the County in that San Francisco County has no other cities besides San Francisco within its boundaries. (See Attachment I for a comparison of tenant protections across certain local jurisdictions in California).

Additionally, programs across the State vary in scope and degree of regulation, and are not limited to rent-stabilization provisions. Tenant protections can exist either with, or without rent stabilization, and may include just-cause for eviction requirements, relocation assistance for non-fault tenant evictions, and freedom from discrimination, retaliation and harassment.

¹⁴ California Civil Code § 1954.25

¹⁵ Ross v. Berkeley (1987) 655 F. Supp. 820, 823

¹⁶ California jurisdictions with rent stabilization ordinances include: Berkeley, Beverly Hills, East Palo Alto, Hayward, Los Angeles, Los Gatos, Mountain View, Oakland, Palm Springs, Richmond, San Francisco, San Jose, Santa Monica, Thousand Oaks, West Hollywood.

Overview of Common Practices

For those jurisdictions that have rent level protections, the CEO noted several common elements across these programs. The rent level protections have been put in place to ensure that proper maintenance of units is performed, that amenities are maintained, that there is a rent decrease process if amenities are taken away, and a rent increase process if a landlord performed rehabilitation or upgrades to a unit, such that a landlord can show there is no longer a fair return on their investment. These practices are maintained in cities such as Santa Monica, West Hollywood, and the City and County of San Francisco.

Further, for a program to effectively control rent levels, jurisdictions couple rent level protections with eviction protections. This includes the establishment of "just cause" ordinances, or laws that lay out specific reasons why a landlord can initiate eviction proceedings against a tenant. Eviction protections without rent level protections still allow landlords to increase the rent to a level that's unaffordable to the tenant, thereby circumventing the eviction process. Every jurisdiction in the State with rent level protections also has eviction protections. San Francisco requires the reason for eviction to be in tenant notices, with information regarding tenants' rights. San Jose, likewise, requires that information on tenants' rights be provided to the tenant upon eviction, and Richmond requires that a notice be filed with their Rent Board prior to eviction.

As rents and property values continue to rise, many jurisdictions have supplemented their rent level protection programs with harassment protections. This is a means to protect tenants whose landlord is acting to "harass" the tenant in an effort to have them voluntarily vacate the unit so that another tenant can move in and the rent can be re-set at a higher level. Such harassment practices include: 1) intimidation tactics, 2) excessive three-day notices to perform covenants of the lease, 3) a landlord's refusal to perform necessary repairs for a tenant, or 4) a landlord entering a tenant's unit unannounced without giving them the proper notice. In order to combat against this type of practice, some jurisdictions, such as Santa Monica, San Francisco and West Hollywood, have chosen to implement a harassment protection ordinance that allows for civil damages in each separate violation of the ordinance.

The following summaries detail common practices from jurisdictions across California, and outside of the State, in establishing tenant protections.

Practices Regarding Rent Stabilization

Rent stabilization ordinances must be consistent with Costa-Hawkins, thereby limiting their applicability to rental units where certificates of occupancy were issued prior to February 1, 1995. Property owners of rentals in existence prior to 1995 may lawfully set the initial rate for any new tenancy. Single family homes and other single family dwellings, like condominiums separate from the title to any other dwelling, are exempt from rent stabilization as well.

Rent Stabilization Ordinances

The rent stabilization ordinances across the State vary in their applicability standards. Jurisdictions with older rent stabilization ordinances, such as the Cities of Los Angeles and San Francisco, only apply the rent increase limits to rental units that existed at the time the original ordinances were adopted, 1978 and 1979, respectively. Application of recently enacted rent stabilization ordinances in the Cities of Mountain View and Richmond capture all rental units not subject to preemption by Costa-Hawkins, or future changes in State law. The City of Beverly Hills recently revised its ordinance, which previously only applied to rental units built prior to 1978 (when the ordinance was originally enacted), to include additional rentals built prior to 1995, the limit set by Costa-Hawkins. In terms of exemptions from their ordinances, some jurisdictions, such as San Jose, exempt duplexes. Others (Palm Springs and Oakland) exempt small multi-unit properties if the owner resides in one of the units as his or her principle residence. Additionally, San Francisco exempts substantially renovated units. Transient housing units, such as hotels and motels, as well as hospitals, rehabilitation, and care facilities are exempt from rent stabilization.

Permissible Rent Increases

Rent stabilization imposes set limits on annual rent increases, which are generally calculated in relation to the Consumer Price Index (CPI), such as in San Francisco, or calculated based on a flat percentage rate, such as in the City of San Jose, a jurisdiction which recently lowered its allowable increase from 8 percent to 5 percent per year. Each jurisdiction has some allowance for automatic rent increases. Further, in addition to the annual rent increase, some jurisdictions allow for a landlord's costs, such as registration fees or elements of a property tax bill, to be passed through to tenants. Most rent stabilization ordinances are implemented in conjunction with eviction protections and often relocation assistance requirements, so as to discourage landlords from evicting tenants without cause in order to set a higher initial rate for a new tenancy.

One further example is Culver City, which has not enacted a rent stabilization ordinance, but does have a mandatory mediation program between landlords and tenants for excessive or unjustified rent increases, as alleged by the tenant. A tenant may request mediation within 15 days of an increase notice, and the appointed Landlord-Tenant Mediation Board then conducts mediation. After good-faith mediation, any rent increase decided upon is permissible.

Fair Return on Investment

Every jurisdiction with a rent stabilization ordinance also has a mechanism in place to ensure the property owner receives their constitutional right to a fair return on his or her property. Should a landlord believe increased operating costs justify a greater increase than permitted by ordinance, they may file a rent increase petition with the administrative body to make a fair return on their investment. Similarly, tenants may petition to decrease rents if the housing services provided by the landlord are reduced. A hearing officer typically presides over individual petitions for rent increases or decreases, with an appeal process, and resolution in court if necessary. Some jurisdictions have a Board or Commission that is appointed, such as Mountain View, whose Rental Housing Committee is appointed by City Council, or elected, such as in Berkeley and Santa Monica.

Though inherently limited by Costa-Hawkins, rent stabilization ordinances can be legally drafted to address areas not preempted by the State. Rent control ordinances in Berkeley, Santa Monica, East Palo Alto, and West Hollywood have withstood legal challenges. Recently, Richmond and Mountain View's newly adopted rent stabilization ordinances were challenged by the California Apartment Association, but the plaintiff eventually dismissed the lawsuits.

Practices Regarding Just Cause Evictions

State law does not require a landlord to continue a tenancy at the end of a lease as long as the tenant has been given proper notice of the landlord's intent to end the tenancy.¹⁷ As a means to address displacement concerns, many local jurisdictions have adopted "just-cause" for eviction ordinances, which require a landlord to provide written cause for the termination and evidence supporting the termination action. Ordinances requiring just-cause for eviction are a means to protect tenants from a landlord's ability to evict them to gain potentially significant rent increases. Typically, just-cause ordinances provide a limited range of allowable causes for eviction including: 1) non-payment of rent; 2) significant breaches to the lease agreement; 3) refusal to provide access to the unit; 4) willful damage to the unit; and 5) sub-tenancy without approval.

In all jurisdictions with a rent stabilization ordinance, there are several just causes for eviction through no fault of the tenant. In San Jose, Berkeley, Mountain View, and Richmond, if an owner needs to make substantial repairs to the unit to bring it into compliance with the building code, a landlord can evict the tenant after paying them the appropriate relocation assistance. Further, if the owner chooses to go out of the rental business by availing himself, or herself, of the Ellis Act, the tenants can be evicted without cause, provided that the proper relocation benefits are paid to the tenants. Beverly Hills allows for a no-fault eviction if the owner is converting the unit into a condominium, whereas Santa Monica has placed a ban on condominium conversions.

¹⁷ California Civil Code § 1946.1

A just-cause ordinance can be a stand-alone ordinance or implemented in connection with rent stabilization, as well as relocation assistance. The City of Glendale has a just cause eviction ordinance, which requires relocation assistance, but does not have rent stabilization.¹⁸ Since just-cause ordinances are not subject to Costa-Hawkins limitations, they can be applied to all rentals, or only rent stabilized units, and can also be used to provide additional protections for certain classes of tenants, such as persons with disabilities, elderly, terminally ill, and families with children in school.

Practices Regarding Relocation Assistance

Relocation assistance is another tenant protection used in a majority of jurisdictions surveyed. Typically paired with just-cause evictions, an ordinance can require relocation payments to be paid to tenants when evicted for no fault. The amount required by a jurisdiction varies; some are flat fees depending on the number of bedrooms, and others are dependent upon the type of tenant being displaced, as well as the amount of time the tenant lived in the unit.

The City of Los Angeles requires relocation assistance for units subject to the Rent Stabilization Ordinance for any tenant evicted for a reason where the tenant is not at fault and assesses the fee based on several factors, including the length of the tenancy, the age of the tenants (families with young children or elderly), and the income of the tenant (low-income). The type of property owner is also taken into consideration, and a lower fee is assessed for "mom and pop" property owners who own small multi-unit properties.¹⁹ The City of Oakland only requires relocation assistance payments when the tenant is evicted due to the City's code enforcement efforts mandating the property owner make substantial repairs to the unit, such that they necessitate the tenant moving out.²⁰ All jurisdictions with rent stabilization require relocation assistance for no-fault or Ellis Act evictions.

Implied Warranty of Habitability

A landlord is legally responsible for repairing conditions that seriously affect the rental unit's habitability. A California Supreme Court case held that all residential leases and rental agreements contain an implied warranty of habitability. Therefore, under this "implied warranty of habitability," a landlord must repair problems that make the rental unit unfit to live in, or uninhabitable. The City of Los Angeles has a tenant habitability ordinance, which incentivizes landlords to correct uninhabitable and hazardous conditions through its cost recovery program. The City of Richmond has a Residential Rental Inspection Program that requires a registration fee and rental inspections with a corresponding inspection fee every three years. In Santa Monica, tenants may petition for a rent decrease if certain entitled amenities are removed and not restored.

Practices to Address Freedom from Discrimination, Retaliation and Harassment

The federal Fair Housing Act states that it is unlawful to discriminate in housing based on race, color, religion, national origin, disability, familial status (having children under age 18), or sex.²¹ All rental properties are covered under this act, and all tenants are protected by it. In addition to the Fair Housing Act, and other federal and State laws, several local jurisdictions have chosen to enact ordinances to further protect tenants against discrimination, retaliation, harassment, or some combination thereof.

In general, Courts will assume “retaliation” by the landlord if negative action is taken on the tenant within 180 days (six months) after any of the prior tenant actions.²² Where retaliation is assumed, a tenant may offer the retaliation as a defense to eviction. The City of Oakland has an ordinance reflecting the same, whereas the City of Glendale has an ordinance imposing fines for retaliatory evictions.²³ Santa Monica, San Francisco, and West Hollywood prohibit discrimination, retaliation and harassment, and allow for civil penalties against those who are found to engage in such practices.

Tenant harassment may take on various forms. State law expressly prohibits a landlord from abusing the right to enter the unit.²⁴ The Cities of Santa Monica and West Hollywood each have ordinances that define retaliatory and discriminatory actions by a landlord as a form of harassment, as well as provide several other prohibitions against threats, intimidation, and misrepresentation. The City of Santa Monica has also expressly prohibited landlord discrimination on the basis of a tenant’s source of income, including Section 8 housing vouchers.²⁵ Neither federal nor California law prohibits discrimination against Section 8 housing voucher holders. The City of Santa Monica’s law defines refusal to accept Section 8 as a form of tenant harassment. The law was challenged and ultimately upheld in Los Angeles Superior Court.

The City and County of San Francisco addresses the issue of Section 8 housing vouchers through prohibitions against source of income discrimination. Under San Francisco law, property owners and real estate agents are prohibited from refusing to accept federal, state, or local housing subsidies as a form of rental payment, or to indicate in rental advertisements that housing subsidies will not be accepted as payment.²⁶ Eight states and the District of Columbia have enacted anti-discrimination ordinances based on a tenant's source of income.

Government Funded Legal Representation

San Francisco partially funds full scope legal representation in eviction defense cases as a mechanism for protecting tenants. Beginning in 2012, San Francisco became the nation's first "Right to Civil Counsel City," providing access to legal services in cases involving basic human needs, including a focus on housing and representation in unlawful detainer proceedings. San Francisco has funded a position to administer this program, with legal representation provided pro bono. However, only 10 percent of the tenants who use the city-funded network are able to get full scope legal representation, due to the lack of adequate funding for the network of attorneys.

The City of New York recently announced a plan to protect tenants threatened by "unlawful" displacement, including those being targeted by landlords looking to replace the tenants with higher paying renters. This support will be paid for by a $93 million increase in City funding for tenant legal services to be phased in over five years. Under the City's plan, tenants with household incomes below $50,000 will have access to the free legal representation. The program plans to serve over 400,000 tenants by the time that it is fully implemented in four years.

Practices Regarding Funding and Administration of Tenant Protections

Rent stabilization programs operate based on either a mandated registration system, or a complaint-based system, where violations arise only when a tenant or landlord files a petition. All registration-based programs require the landlord to pay a fee for units registered and subject to rent stabilization. As of 2016, the City of Los Angeles requires landlords to register current rent amounts, the last rent increase, utilities paid by the landlord, and parking provided. Since 1999, the City of Santa Monica has maintained similar registration requirements, as well as the reason for ending the prior tenancy and an option to register additional amenities, such as storage space and pet approvals. The Cities of Berkeley and West Hollywood also operate under a registration model. The Cities of San Francisco and Oakland do not require registration, and operate under the complaint-based model.

In cities with a registration program, the registration fee is used to offset the cost of administering the tenant protections through the local agency. An annual registration fee will be assessed to the landlord to register each unit under the rent stabilization program. The landlord may then in turn pass a portion of that registration fee on to the tenant as a surcharge in addition to their monthly maximum allowable rent. Santa Monica allows for half of the registration fee to be passed to the tenant, as does the City of Berkeley.

In San Francisco, where there is no registration program, the fees are collected as a portion of property taxes. The costs of administering and enforcing the Rent Ordinance through the Rent Board are equitably distributed among San Francisco's residential units. The owner of each residential unit is required to pay an annual rent stabilization and arbitration fee, which is the projected annual cost of funding the Rent Board, plus related administrative costs. The tax collector bills the fee to all owners of residential property on the property tax bill. All laws applicable to the collection and enforcement of property taxes are applicable to the collection and enforcement of the rent stabilization and arbitration fee, and any lien as a result of the nonpayment of the fee has the same effect as a judgment lien.

To ensure proper implementation of tenant protection ordinances, jurisdictions provide for due process regarding a proposed rent increase in excess of the maximum allowable rent, allegations of an unjust or unlawful eviction, allegations of discrimination or retaliation, or allegations of uninhabitable accommodations. This administrative process ranges from mediation and arbitration in some jurisdictions such as Culver City, to administrative hearings before a hearing officer, Board, or Commission, such as in Berkeley, West Hollywood and Santa Monica.

To oversee the administrative process and to adjudicate appeals, most jurisdictions with rent-stabilization programs establish a public body, either appointed or elected, to implement the ordinances, publish the rate for the annual general rent adjustments, hear petitions for individual rent adjustments above the annual general adjustment or requests for rent decreases, hear removal permits, and make policy by conducting studies, amending ordinances, and publishing reportable statistics.

Practices Outside of California

Outside of California, there are tenant protection programs in different states and localities. For example, a number of communities in New York State have rent regulation. In New York City, 2 percent of the buildings are rent controlled and allow rent increases only for increased operating costs; whereas others are rent stabilized, which generally covers buildings built after 1947 and before 1974 that have six or more units. For the rent-stabilized units, a landlord can only increase rent by 1 percent for a one-year lease, and 2.75 percent for a two-year lease. When rent reaches $2,500, or if the tenant's income exceeds $200,000 for two consecutive years, the landlord can deregulate the apartment and bring it up to market rates. Tenants are additionally entitled to receive required services, to have their leases renewed for a term of one or two years, and may not be evicted except on grounds allowed by law. Tenants who are disabled or 62 years or older may also qualify for full exemption, or partial exemption from rent increases. Tenant protections also prohibit harassment of rent-regulated tenants.

Rent control in Washington, D.C. is generally subject to rentals built before 1975 and allows a restricted annual increase equal to the CPI plus 2 percent, but not more than 10 percent. For tenants who are elderly or disabled, the maximum increase in rent charged is the CPI percentage only, but not more than 5 percent. The law in Washington D.C. requires that all rentals are registered with the Rental Accommodations Division. Upon vacancy of a unit, the landlord may increase the rent by 10 percent over what charged to the former tenant, or increase the rent up to the amount charged for a comparable unit, but not in an amount greater than 30 percent.

The above examples demonstrate additional approaches to providing residential tenant protection, such as mandating lease renewals and setting limits on rent increases after vacancies. California localities are, however, prohibited from adopting such laws due to preemption by Costa-Hawkins.

MEANINGFUL PRACTICES FROM OTHER JURISDICTIONS - COMMERCIAL

In commercial tenancies, the written contract between the landlord and the tenant governs, thus tenant protections are more limited. However, a small number of jurisdictions have explored protecting commercial tenants to maintain the continuity of small and local businesses. To incentivize protection of "legacy" businesses, San Francisco passed Proposition J in 2015.²⁷ A business may qualify as a legacy business if the business is 30 years or older, has contributed to its neighborhood's history, and agrees to maintain their identity, name, and craft. Under Proposition J, legacy businesses receive grants of $500 per full-time employee up to 100 employees per year, and landlords who extend the leases of such businesses for at least ten years receive $4.50 per square foot up to 5,000 square feet of space leased per year.

In New York City, the City Council introduced the Small Business Jobs Survival Act in 2014, which would have required a 10-year minimum lease with a right to renewal, negotiation requirements, and prohibition on landlords passing taxes on to tenants. There has been no action taken on this bill since its introduction.²⁸ In 2016, New York City adopted the Commercial Tenant Harassment law. The law prohibits landlords from engaging in harassing tactics to encourage a tenant to end the tenancy and provides for civil penalties in court ranging from $1,000 to $10,000.²⁹ The court may also issue a restraining order against the commercial landlord to prevent further harassment, and may require the landlord to pay a tenant's attorney's fees if the tenant prevails in a legal proceeding.

EXISTING INFORMATION AND ANALYSIS OF PRIVATE RENTAL HOUSING STOCK

Several studies and mapping projects have endeavored to analyze displacement trends, including demographic and physical changes, in neighborhoods³⁰ and cities in the Southern California region. There has not, however, been a comprehensive study of these trends in the unincorporated areas of the County.

To evaluate the applicability of tenant protections for the private rental and commercial housing stock in Los Angeles County, the CEO identified and gathered publicly available statistical information from a variety of sources including:

- United States Census
- American Community Survey (ACS) databases
- Applied Geographic Solutions populated by GIS Planning
- CoStar, Redfin, Zillow and other online sources
- State Bureau of Real Estate condominium conversion data
- Department of Regional Planning's GIS-NET3
- Housing Authority of the County of Los Angeles databases of Low Income Housing Tax Credits and Public Housing Units
- Department of Public Works building permit and demolition permit data

The CEO analyzed the information available from these sources to determine factors indicating displacement, and to gain a preliminary understanding of the scope of the issues affecting neighborhoods in the unincorporated areas of the County.

The CEO engaged a consultant with expertise in real estate, zoning, and demographic indicators to conduct an analysis centered on the County's unincorporated communities. The consultant team reviewed the sources of data above by Community Statistical Area (formerly known as Board Approved Statistical Area (BASA), and determined target communities for further analysis based on the number of multi-family rental units in buildings with at least five or more units.³⁰ From a total set of 125 communities, the consultant team profiled 30 areas, representing over 75 percent of the population in the unincorporated County.

²⁹ New York City Administrative Code, Chapter 9, Sections 22-902 and 22-903.

³⁰ This was with the exception of one unincorporated community in the third district, West Chatsworth, which presented with mobile homes as the majority of rental units.

Key Indicators Analyzed

In order to analyze the existing rental housing stock and commercial properties for lease in the 30 chosen areas, the consultant team reviewed several key indicators to assign a level of displacement risk in each unincorporated area profiled. Certain of the key indicators are as follows:

- Changes in rents and housing prices
- Changes in household incomes
- Changes in housing tenure
- Availability of income-restricted affordable housing

Each community was then classified as experiencing “evident displacement,” “potential displacement”, or “no evidence of displacement” when all factors taken together were analyzed. See Attachment II for a summary of this analysis.

Summary of Findings

Los Angeles County’s shortage of homes affordable and available to lower-income families continues to grow. Home prices in Los Angeles County have increased nearly 80 percent over the past five years, with average rents for both apartments and retail space increasing by over 25 percent, according to the real estate brokerage Redfin. The County’s median household income has not increased proportionally over the same time period, as reported by the State’s Department of Housing and Community Development. This and the above referenced indicators suggest that displacement, or the possibility of displacement may be an issue throughout much of the County.

As referenced previously, the population in the 30 unincorporated areas profiled represents 75 percent of the total unincorporated area population. There are over 93,000 rental units in the area profiled, and the median household income is $61,680 annually. The average rent was estimated at $1,300 per month in 2017, up from $1,000 per month five years ago. Further, the analysis found that of those residing in the profiled unincorporated areas, 44 percent are renters.

Of the 30 communities profiled, data revealed evidence of displacement in five unincorporated areas. These areas are: East Los Angeles, East Rancho Dominguez, Lennox, Willowbrook, and West Chatsworth. A summary is provided below:

East Los Angeles

East Los Angeles has a median income of $38,766, which is well below the unincorporated area median income of $61,680. Despite this relatively low median income, the average rent is $1,140 per month. Two-thirds of households in this area rent rather than own their homes. With multiple transit stations and associated development planned for East Los Angeles, the area's improved accessibility may attract increased real estate investment, disproportionately affecting lower income residential tenants and commercial renters.

East Rancho Dominguez

East Rancho Dominguez has a 49 percent renter population with a $44,127 Area Median Income. This is a lower median household income than the County overall, and over 60 percent of the households would qualify for affordable housing. However, there are only 75 rental units in East Rancho Dominguez that are restricted affordable housing, and there has been a higher than average rate of foreclosures in recent years. These statistics and others, taken together, may indicate a high risk of displacement.

Lennox

In Lennox, over 70 percent of households rent rather than own their homes, while the median income is $36,424 annually. Despite this lower than average median income, the median rent is $1,350 per month. This represents a 64 percent increase over the last five years. Due to the fact that rents have increased more rapidly in Lennox than throughout the County, and at a faster rate than income levels in this same area, market pricing pressures are significantly impacting tenants in this area.

Willowbrook

Willowbrook is home to 4,100 of the unincorporated County's rental units, and the median household income of $36,481 is well below the County average. Areas of potential impact include the higher than County-average rate of foreclosures in recent years, and planned transit improvements and associated development. This could exacerbate both residential and commercial displacement.

West Chatsworth

In West Chatsworth, located in northwest San Fernando Valley, the number of renter-occupied units has increased 79 percent between 2000 and 2015. Of note, 43 percent of the total housing units in the community are mobile homes, and 65 percent of the mobile homes are renter-occupied. The rental vacancy rate is high at 25 percent. Additionally, there is currently a significant amount of retail square footage available in West Chatsworth, and retail rents have increased 46 percent over the last five years. This could indicate market pressures for retail tenants in this unincorporated area. Further study is needed of both the residential and commercial rental market in this area.

Notable Observations

Although evidence of displacement was not seen in each community, several communities presented data that will require further analysis to determine what tenant protections, if any, would be most appropriate. For example, the unincorporated community of Marina del Rey is unique in that the land is entirely County-owned and 95 percent of housing units are renter-occupied. The area's median rent is high at $3,100 per month, but the small household size could indicate that these may be senior householders, comprised of retirees who have assets in addition to retirement income. Also of note was that in Willowbrook from 2000 to 2015, there was a 44 percent decrease in rental housing stock. Issues such as this, as well as the circumstances affecting Marina Del Rey, will be analyzed further as the County moves forward with its examination of tenant protections.

Next Steps and Further Analysis

Upon submission of this Framework, the CEO will convene the Tenant Protections Working Group (Working Group) to further explore and analyze the private rental housing stock in the unincorporated areas of the County. Additional information will be gathered to compare the vacancy rate, cost of housing and rate of eviction in jurisdictions with rent stabilization and tenant protections versus those jurisdictions that have not imposed specific tenant protections. The Working Group may also review the broader economic impacts to jurisdictions with rent stabilization to assess the full range of costs and benefits associated with tenant protections.

INVENTORY OF STAKEHOLDERS

The May 16, 2017 Motion requested an inventory of stakeholders with an interest in the rental property market. To assist with this response, the CEO directed the Department of Consumer and Business Affairs (DCBA) to prepare the inventory as they are actively engaged with the landlord and tenant community. DCBA assists landlords and tenants by offering counseling to interested parties to educate them as to their rights and responsibilities under the law, and by offering free, confidential mediation to avoid eviction proceedings. DCBA prepared an inventory of organizations, constituencies, stakeholders and advocates with expertise, or involvement in the rental property market (see Attachment III). The inventory consists of Community Based Organizations for both landlord and tenant advocates, governmental agencies, groups providing legal assistance to landlords and tenants, as well as business organizations and chambers of commerce. The County has expressed an interest in engaging a diversity of viewpoints as it establishes the Working Group to review the Framework and put forth recommendations in response to the Motion.

CONCLUSION

As housing costs continue to rise in Los Angeles County, there is the likelihood of significant rent increases for tenants in homes that are currently affordable to them. In researching the legal and regulatory framework for the private rental market, as well as studying exemplars from other jurisdictions, the information presented herein can help guide a public engagement process on tenant protections. The Framework is an attempt to give the necessary background to inform decisions regarding which tenant protections might be considered to provide at-risk tenants with greater stability in their homes.

INVENTORY OF ORGANIZATIONS WITH EXPERTISE OR INVOLVEMENT IN THE RENTAL MARKET

Inventory of Organizations with Expertise or Involvement in the Rental Market

The Los Angeles County Department of Consumer and Business Affairs (DCBA) has compiled a list of stakeholders and advocates with expertise or involvement in tenant protection, eviction defense and the rental property market. These stakeholders and advocates serve the vast majority of Los Angeles County constituencies including tenants, landlords, business groups, realtor associations, and building associations.

This list is intended to identify a broad cross section of government agencies, community based organizations, academic research, business associations and tenant/landlord advocates who have an interest or represent a constituency in the rental housing/commercial market. As this work unfolds, DCBA intends to expand this list as appropriate to ensure all relevant constituencies are included and have a voice.
