Large-Scale Disaster and Emergency Readiness and Preparedness

On August 25, 2017, Hurricane Harvey made landfall near Rockport, Texas as a Category 4 hurricane, and caused catastrophic inland flooding throughout the southeastern region of Texas and in other gulf states. Consequently, early estimates suggest that the region has suffered an estimated $125 billion in property damage and, to date, at least 39 deaths. Hundreds of thousands of homes have been inundated by flooding, prompting over 13,000 rescues and the displacement of more than 30,000 people. This is a human tragedy and a time of great need for the people of southeast Texas and the Gulf states. The County of Los Angeles (County) wishes to extend its deepest sympathies and wishes for a safe and expedient recovery to the victims of Hurricane Harvey.

As a continuation of past efforts to respond to large-scale disasters around the world, the County is part of an international response unit currently assisting in Texas and at the request of the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), the County Fire Department sent two Urban Search and Rescue Teams, California Task Force-2 (CATF-2). CATF-2 is a Swiftwater rescue component deployed to assist with search and rescue efforts in areas affected by major flooding. These teams are expected to be deployed for five to six days. In addition, the County's Office of Emergency Management is in contact with the appropriate Federal authorities to receive and respond to possible additional requests for help.

In August 2005, following Hurricane Katrina's devastation in Louisiana, the Board acted swiftly and established a Task Force comprised of key County Departments to strategize and prepare to receive hundreds of displaced persons from those affected by the hurricane. While it is unclear whether a post-incident report was prepared, and it is also unknown whether the anticipated number of displaced persons actually arrived in the County and requested public services, to the extent possible, the County should once again prepare to receive displaced persons and families.

In addition to meeting the County's responsibility to help respond to large-scale disasters around the world, it is important that the County and its residents are prepared to respond to large-scale disasters and emergencies locally. A review of the County's level of readiness and the public's level of preparedness is necessary given the multiple County departments and agencies involved, in addition to the 88 cities and other jurisdictions with which the County must coordinate.

In addition to aid and the deployment of County resources to areas of need, County employees have a long history of generosity and compassion during disasters, supporting relief efforts such as Hurricane Katrina, Superstorm Sandy, the tsunami in Southeast Asia, and the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks. There is a great need for immediate relief in Texas, including food, water and shelter, but the scale of this disaster is such that that assistance will be needed over the coming days, weeks, months, and years.

 - c. An assessment of current efforts to educate the public about steps that County residents should take to prepare for disasters, with recommendations to improve the effectiveness of such efforts. This
