James Darren

An accomplished actor, director and recording artist, James Darren enjoys a multi-faceted show business career that spans over five decades. With a notable career in films (“Gidget”, “The Guns of Navarone”) as well as television (“The Time Tunnel,” “T.J. Hooker,” “Star Trek: Deep Space Nine”), Darren re-emerged in 1999 as a recording star, reaffirming his incomparable talents as a singer.

Born in South Philadelphia as James Ercolani, a second-generation American of Italian descent, Darren cites his beloved grandmother as the greatest guiding light of his life and his career. By the age of 14, he knew he wanted a show business career, and he embarked on the road to stardom by singing in nightclubs in Philadelphia and South Jersey. By age 18, he was in New York, studying acting for several years with the legendary drama teacher Stella Adler.

It was a chance introduction to Hollywood movie producer Joyce Selznick that led to Darren's seven-year contract with Columbia Pictures and his first big break: starring as the college student-surfer Moondoggie opposite Sandra Dee in the 1959 classic comedy hit, "Gidget." Two sequels would follow, and Darren was soon on Hollywood's short list of most sought-after young dramatic actors. He would make 20 films in all, including "The Guns of Navarone," "The Lively Set," "The Gene Krupa Story," "The Brothers Rico," "Gunman's Walk," "Let No Man Write My Epitaph," and "Diamond Head."

Darren's singing career encompasses an impressive roster of musical credits including 14 albums and five Top 10 singles, including the 1961 Grammy-nominated "Goodbye Cruel World," which held the No. 1 spot on the Billboard charts for six weeks. Throughout the early 60s, his recording career continued to skyrocket with subsequent Top 10 hits including "Her Royal Majesty," "Conscience," and "All." In 1976, he landed still another hit with "You Take My Breath Away" from the Oscar-winning film "Rocky."

Darren would also make his mark on the small screen, starring in several hit television series, including “The Time Tunnel,” “R.J. Hooker,” “Star Trek: Deep Space Nine” and “Melrose Place.” In 1987, the versatile entertainer began another phase of his career, this time as a highly in-demand director for television, whose credits include several “movies of the week,” and more than 50 television shows ranging from “Melrose Place” and “Beverly Hills 90210” to “Hunter” and “Walker, Texas Ranger.”

His portrayal of the hologram character Vic Fontaine, a swinging 60s Rat Pack crooner, on “Star Trek: Deep Space Nine” in 1993 reawakened Darren’s passion for his first love: singing. The tremendous reaction from the series’ fans clearly demonstrated the feeling was mutual. He was once again in the vocal spotlight in 1999, with the release of two Concord albums “This One’s From the Heart” and “Because of You.” Both releases celebrate the Great American Song Book and introduce the world to Darren’s lush vocals.

Because of his recordings, his concert appearances in Atlantic City and Las Vegas, as well as his concerts with world-renowned symphony orchestras across the United States, including the San Diego Symphony, the Dallas Symphony and the Iowa Symphony, the media has also taken notice of James Darren the singer. The San Diego Union-Tribune called him a “compendium of coolness, a wizard of with-it-ness.” The Chicago Sun-Times said “Darren is as smooth as silk.”

Actor, director, recording artist – James Darren has made an indelible mark in the entertainment industry.
