66.		Favor	Hovanes Tonoyan	I am a UC Berkeley graduate currently protecting the magic for one of the world's top employers. I myself have been a survivor of violent crime in Los Angeles County, and have experienced the most difficulties in getting the healing I need from my city, my county, and the state. I was the only one from Burbank, Los Angeles County, and California, to make a public comment to the federal government for their VOCA regulations update, as well as 1 of the only 2 Burbank advocates who attended the National Crime Victim's Rights Week candlelight vigil on the National Mall in Washington D.C. on April 24th. I made comments to the California Victim Compensation Board on May 16th, where I was the only member of the public to make my voice heard. Please stop letting victims and survivors suffer in silence. Do more. They lose housing, health, employment, credit scores, and so much more. There needs to be more verifications and power exercised by the County victim centers in favor of victims, not against them. City's need to be held accountable. CalVCB needs to be advocated to and we all need to stand up to them and speak up about all the injustice being committed. Even someone like me who is prestigiously educated, makes six figures a year, and is young and active in my community at elite levels, is still treated as poorly as any other victim who might be from even more disadvantaged circumstances. Please do better.
