			Nikole Bresciani	This is a national issue, but specifically since we are located in LA County, we support this agenda item as we have to regionally come up with solutions to combat overpopulation in shelters. This is not a one shelter or one agency issue, and we need to work collaboratively to move the needle to ensure positive outcomes for adoptable, healthy pets.
		Other	Lauren L Robinson	Trap, Neuter and Release is one of the critical tools in controlling the stray cat population and preventing them from entering into shelters in the first place. It is striking that LA County, one of the largest local governments in the nation, doesn't offer these services which could prevent overcrowding from the start.

RE: Support of 101-B

Board of Supervisors:

Please accept my sincere thank you for addressing and acknowledging the current shortages in the animal health communities and the need to think innovatively for both new solutions and to bulk up the resources of those that continue to be successful.

Your report is quite comprehensive, but I would like to add that while these Veterinary shortages affect shelters, they also impact pet owners who cannot obtain needed services which affects their ability to keep their pets and results in the relinquishment of those pets from "forever" homes back to the shelters.

Scarcity of supply often results in in higher costs which has increased both the surrender and economic euthanasia of owned pets as well.

Finally, if an effort is not made to increase housing availability for those with pets and to prohibit insurance companies from refusing to cover properties or gouge customers who have or want pets, including animal shelters, there will be no homes in which to place or house our pets.

Sincerely,

Madeline Bernstein
President
