

Professor Cyn Yamashiro is the founding executive director of the Center for Juvenile Law and Policy at Loyola Law School. He is an alumnus of Loyola Law School and of UCLA where he earned his BA in Economics. Professor Yamashiro teaches classes in juvenile law and trial advocacy. He has commented on cases and trends in juvenile law for television, radio and print media and frequently lectures on juvenile delinquency law. Prior to his appointment at Loyola Law School, he served as Deputy Public Defender III with the Los Angeles County Public Defender's Office where he tried 52 cases to a jury and litigated more than 200 bench trials in municipal, juvenile, and superior court. During his 10 years with the Office, Yamashiro served as Long Cause Felony Trial Attorney in the Los Angeles Criminal Division, Deputy in-Charge with the Juvenile Division in Compton and Felony Trial Attorney at the LAX Courthouse in Los Angeles. Earlier in his legal career, Yamashiro worked with the San Diego County Public Defender's Office, and Minami, Lew & Tamaki in San Francisco. While in law school he clerked for the International Labor Rights and Education Fund in Guatemala City, Guatemala and the American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California in Los Angeles.